On a roll

THIS OFF-ROAD roll-over marked the point when soldier's wife Linda Clarke became accepted by locals in the Falkland Islands. Down in this British outpost in the South Atlantic, nearly everyone drives Land Rovers and love off-roading – they call it "bimbleing" – in the rugged hills and sand dunes. Linda became unstuck in her 110 when she accidentally drove into some soft peat. "It collapsed and the 110 just fell over, but no real damage was done. It took one Land Rover to pull me upright and the other to winch me out," she says.

Arresting ambulance

IF YOU DRIVE a Land Rover around Tunbridge Wells, Kent, and get stopped by PC Pete Heaton, don't be surprised if he asks for workshop tips as well as your driving licence. As the proud owner of a 1966 Series IIA, he's always keen to talk to other owners. This ex-Sussex Ambulance was removed from the roads by Pete (he can't divulge why) who says it has all the livery except the siren and blue lights. It also boasts a bank of switches that go so far across the dash that the passenger would probably have to operate them.

ADI, JO, MAX and JJ Nash have owned their Series III for three years and are particularly keen on off-roading around the Brecon Becons. Unfortunately, 'Skylark' is in the garage at the moment – the result of a broken piston on the way back from last year's Billing Show. That's nearly 12 months ago – you'd better get busy with the spanners if you want to get there in time for next month's event of the year!

Check it out

Brian Rosario of Manila, in the Philippines, is the proud owner of this gleaming Defender 90 Tdi, to which he's fitted a Warn 8274 winch, roll cage, snorkel... and checker plate everywhere. He reckons it's ready to tackle any terrain – and we believe him.

Genuine parks

Land Rovers are a common sight at the Alton Towers theme park, as this photograph sent by vehicles manager, Euan Grant, proves. These six assorted Defenders and single Series I are used for a variety of tasks, from patrolling the 500-acre park to helping snow-bound locals in the winter. A Land Rover fan for well over 20 years, Euan says: "We've got rid of nearly all our Japanese 4x4s for the genuine articles."

Series stunner

BERTIL ANDERSSON of Alvesta, Sweden spent 2000 hours in the workshop getting this 1951 Series I 80-inch back into its original condition. "I hope you find it as beautiful as I do," he says. We do, Bertil, we do!
